August 2017

The Canadian Centre for Court Technology – Centre canadien de technologie judiciaire (CCCT-CCTJ) was launched in 2005 and incorporated in 2007 as a federal not-for-profit organization whose mission was to promote the modernization of court services through the use of technology solutions. The Board of Directors and the Members of the Corporation have passed a resolution authorizing the dissolution of the corporation on certain terms including that CCCT-CCTJ's remaining funds be donated to one or more registered Canadian charities as the Officers authorized by the Board saw fit. After receiving expressions of interest, the Authorized Officers decided that York University's Canadian Forum on Civil Justice – Forum canadien sur la justice civile (CFCJ-FCJC) should receive the funds. A cheque has been provided to the Canadian Forum on Civil Justice – Forum canadien sur la justice civile with the possibility that a further modest amount may become available after all liabilities are met.

The theme of modernization, which runs through most if not all of the CFCJ-FCJC's work, is a goal that the CFCJ-FCJC shares with the CCCT. The CCCT-CCTJ is confident that the Canadian Forum on Civil Justice will use the funds to recognize the CCCT-CCTJ's historical mandate in the context of the compatible mandate of the CFCJ-FCJC. In the near future, the remaining digital reports and records generated by the CCCT-CCTJ will be hosted online through the CFCJ-FCJC's Access to Justice Research Network – Réseau de recherche sur l'accès à la justice (AJRN-RRAJ).

The Canadian Forum on Civil Justice – Forum canadien sur la justice civile has conveyed their immense gratitude to the Canadian Centre for Court Technology – Centre canadien de technologie judiciaire for its donation. The CFCJ-FCJC was both delighted and honoured to receive this important gift, which they have indicated will be used to assist in research and projects to modernize our justice system and to improve access to justice in Canada.
